

FACILITATOR PROFILE

Jessica Taylor

A playful, wellbeing possibilitizer, Jessica draws on her expertise as an educator, combined with her qualifications and experience in wellbeing to help schools, communities, and organizations place systems-inspired wellbeing at the heart of their vision and practice. A Co-Creator of The Education Lab, and leading the Research Board at Michelle McQuaid, Jessica is a thoughtful and engaging presenter and facilitator who loves igniting new conversations, and ways-of-being that help bridge the gap often found between research and practice, where she helps people understand the practical strategies, they can employ to assist their own, and other's wellbeing.

Jessica has worked with schools, governments, and organizations globally and across all sectors, where she consults, coaches, co-designs and collaborates with local and international organizations to support the implementation of wellbeing approaches that benefit their respective communities. Creating a warm, inviting, and fun space, Jessica ensures clients feel valued, inspired, and energized, as together they embark on an exciting learning journey full of inquiry, capability-building, passion, and growth.

Jessica loves getting playful and messy with systems science – using her systems-inspired lens to navigate existing complexity within systems – so that she can help you co-create sustainable, positive change. Throughout her research, writing, and presentations, she uses evidence-based Positive Psychology, Positive Education, and Systems Science scholarship to inquire into and co-create spaces that support individuals and communities build awareness of the interdependent nature of wellbeing, and wellbeing approaches that create thriving social systems.

Jessica's energy and professionalism in delivering an exceptional two days and providing our staff with coaching, current research, and evidence-based information that can assist with the overall delivery of Positive Education within our school environment is invaluable and transformative.
